

The REMC "Blended Learning in the Classroom" project is a free professional development course created to provide teachers with effective training and continued support while moving to a blended environment.

Registration is Now Open!

Are you looking to increase student engagement in your classroom? Do you want to effectively blend your learning environment to incorporate online elements? This free statewide Blended Learning in the Classroom course is for teachers of all levels!

Participants will engage within an instructor led blended course, and as part of the course will begin developing a blended learning environment to implement immediately.

20 offerings are available at various locations throughout Michigan. Each offering is limited to the first 15 registrants. When registering, select the location most convenient to you as the course kicks off with a face-to-face meeting with your instructor.

Participant Expectations

This rigorous learning experience requiring between 6-10 hours of work online per week will lead you and your students to success as the the online coursework is coupled with the application of newly learned concepts and strategies in your own classroom.

Each week participants will be expected to:

- Read content
- Participate in collaborative activities (eg. Skype, Google Hangout)
- Complete assignments
- Reflect on personal implementation
- Revise practices based on student feedback and the implementation experience

Modules include:

- History & Concepts
- Pedagogy
- Building Community
- Online Learning & Accessibility
- Online Assessment & evaluation
- Policies & Preparation

Reactions from Pilot participants:

- "focus on the practice and not the tool made all of the content relevant and useful"
- "support of the instructors was great"
- "I'm able to market myself as able to teach both avenues [face-to-face & blended]."

Participants will receive a copy of 'Continuing to Engage the Online Learner' by R. Conrad & J Donaldson and a free Snagit license.
