Only 30 spots available per session.

Beginning in the spring of 2015, Michigan will implement online assessment of students based on the Common Core State Standards.

Although there are many factors that will contribute to a student's success on these assessments, one basic element will be student familiarity with testing in the online environment.

This hands-on workshop will show how teachers can utilize two existing resources – DataDirector and Moodle – to create and administer multiple types of online assessments. Emily Redman from DataDirector will lead a session on using the Assess2Know item bank (currently available at no additional cost).

Participants will have time to explore each resource to determine the best option for their own students.
